Group Starter Task

1. Get into pairs
2. One person is to face the screen, and the other is to sit 'back-to-back', and face the rear of the room
3. The person facing the screen will need to describe the images which appear, without mentioning what they are
4. The person facing the rear of the room, needs to draw the item being described to them

At the end of this, we will swap around.

Then, we will be providing feedback to each other on the performance.

The Osgood-Schramm model of communication

What is it?

The Osgood-Schramm model is a circular model of communication, in which messages go in two directions between encoding and decoding.

As such, this model is useful for describing synchronous, interpersonal communication, but less suitable for cases with little or no feedback.

Interestingly, in the Osgood-Schramm communication model, there is no difference between a sender and a receiver. Both parties are equally encoding and decoding the messages. The interpreter is the person trying to understand the message at that moment.

Furthermore, the Osgood-Schramm communication model shows that information is of no use until it is put into words and conveyed to other people.

The Osgood-Schramm model of communication

The Osgood-Schramm communication model proposes 4 main principles of communication:

1.Communication is circular. — Individuals involved in the communication process are changing their roles as encoders and decoders.

2.Communication is equal and reciprocal. — Both parties are equally engaged as encoders and decoders.

3.The message requires interpretation. — The information needs to be properly interpreted to be understood.

4. The Osgood-Schramm communication model proposes 3 steps in the process of communication:

Encoding, Decoding, and Interpreting.

The Osgood-Schramm communication model example

Imagine you have not heard from your college friend for 15 years. Suddenly, they call you, and you start updating each other about what happened during the time you have not seen each other.

In this example, you and your friend are equally encoding and decoding messages, and your communication is synchronous. You are both interpreting each other's messages.

In Information Theory and Mass Communication, Schramm even says:

"It is misleading to think of the communication process as starting somewhere and ending somewhere. It is really endless. We are really switchboard centers handling and re-routing the great endless current of information."

Are you a born listener task

Are you a born listener yet?

Answer yes or no to each of the below questions:

Question	Yes	No
Do you pay close attention when others are talking?
When sitting next to someone you don't know at a meal do you always seek to find an area of common interest?
Do you believe that everyone has something to teach or share with you that has value for you – now or in the future?
Can you set aside such factors as a person's personality, voice, or delivery in order to find out what he or she knows?
Are you a curious person, interested in people, ideas, and things?
Do you respond with a smile or nod or word of encouragement as the speaker talking? Do you maintain good eye contact?

What are interpersonal skills?

“Interpersonal skills are the traits that help you communicate and interact with others. While communication skills include the ways you express yourself, and the ways you listen to others”

Group Activity | 45 minutes

- Create a presentation which will last for 5 minutes.
- Talk about a topic of a brand/activity/product which you are passionate about.
- You can only use emojis and images
- You must display your presentation at the front of the group, but present from the back of the room

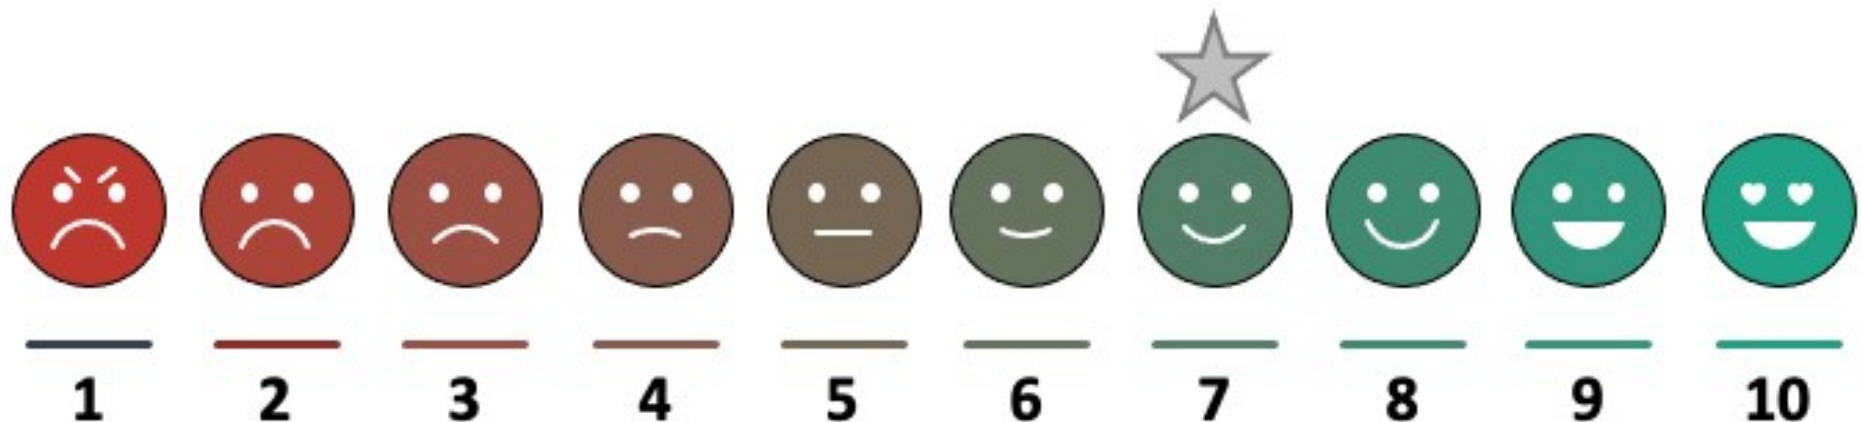

What does collaboration mean to you?

What do you need to do?

- A series of Motivational speeches will be displayed on the screen. You need to score them from 1 to 10.
- You will need to be able to support this rating, based on the video/image. How effective is their communication? Their conviction and influence? How are they utilising their interpersonal skills for success?
